

Charts and respondent quotes for Enhance discussing politics at work survey data

Have you ever lied about your political beliefs at work to avoid conflict?

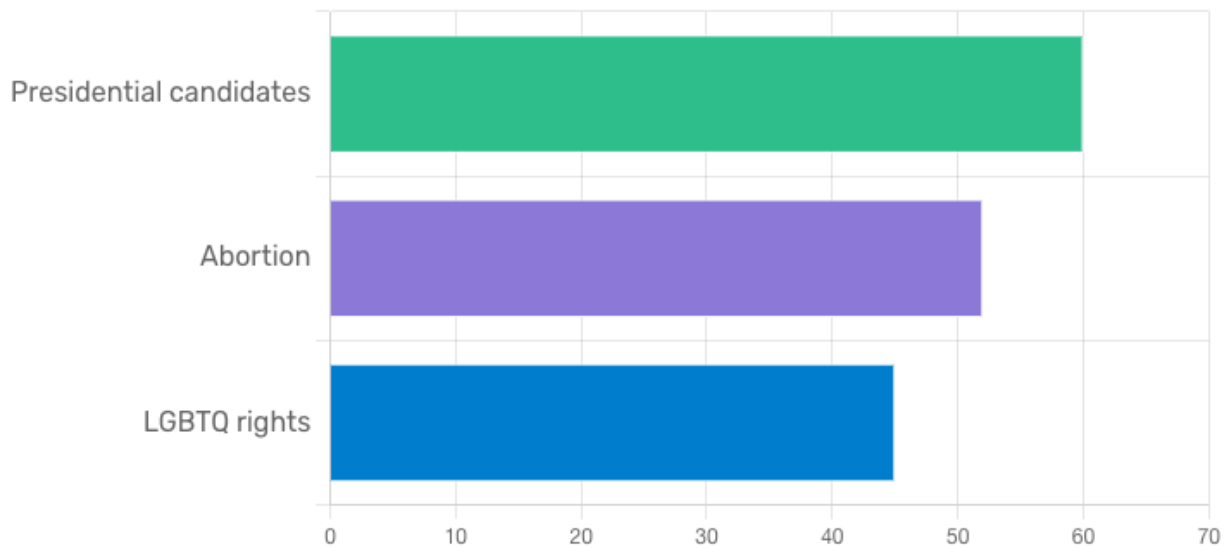

% who've been disciplined at work for expressing their political opinions

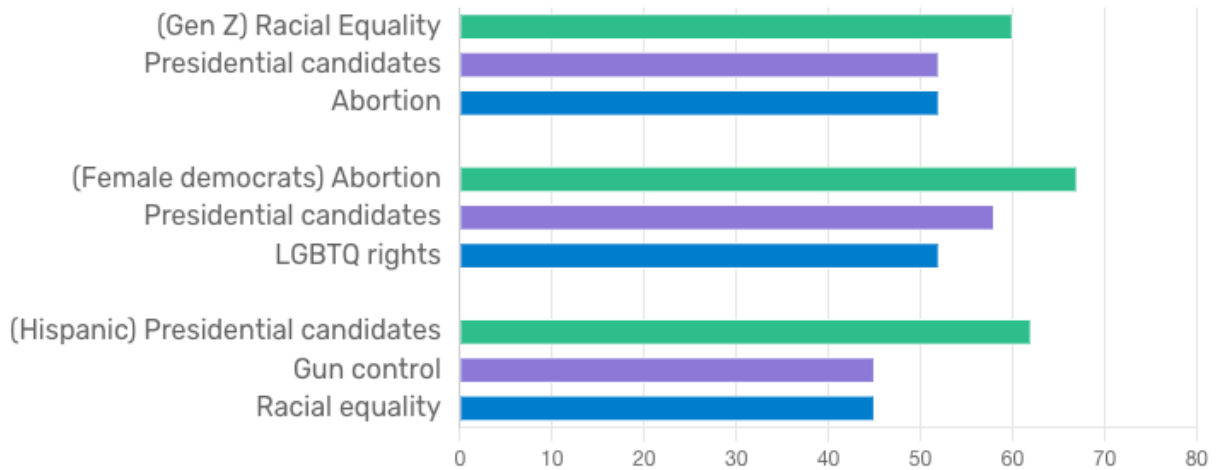

Top three most controversial topics overall

% who chose the topic as being controversial to discuss at work

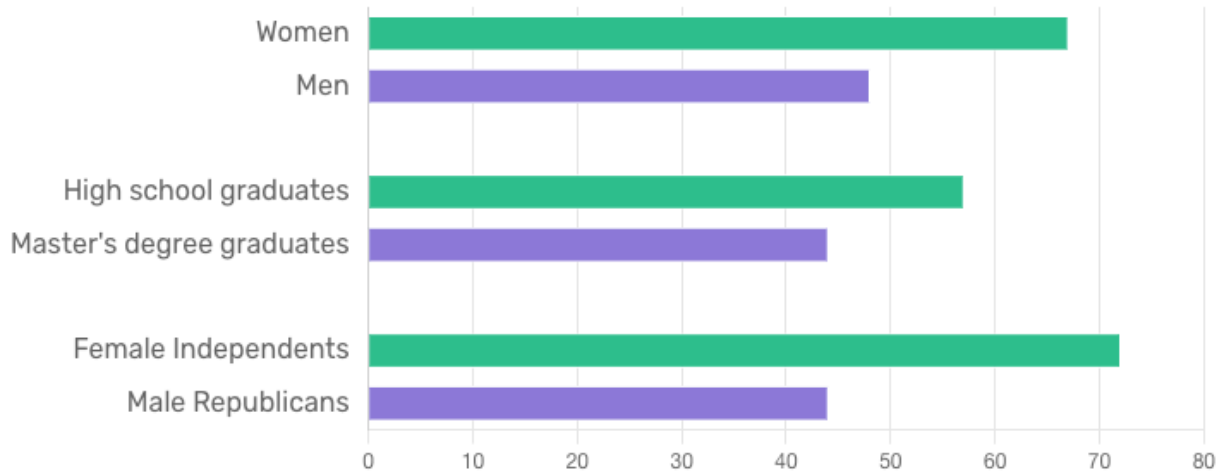

Top three most controversial topics by demographic

% who chose the topic as being controversial by demographic

% who believe it's unacceptable to discuss politics at work

Quotes from respondents sharing their experiences with discussing politics at work

“

I was told who I wanted to vote for was wrong, and if I voted for them I would be a target in my office, as people didn't want that person to win.

— Female, Independent, location not disclosed

“

I was in a discussion about immigration and another employee started going off and telling me to shut up. I'm a receiving manager and they got fired.

— Female, Independent, Ohio

“

I am a moderate Republican. One very liberal person insisted I was MAGA and a wing nut since according to him there was no such thing as a moderate Republican.

— Male, Republican, Pennsylvania

“

I had someone tell me that I was voting for a candidate because they believed I was registered with a specific party opposite of them. I am independent and vote for both candidates of both parties. I don't vote party line regularly. I just told them they shouldn't assume and they got offended because of what they thought I meant.

— Male, Independent, New Jersey

“

I'm a woman. Back in 2016 I had two men ask me in a conference meeting if I was voting for Hillary. Insinuating that I must be voting for her because I am a woman and would only vote for another woman. I was coincidentally a Project Manager at the time.

— Female, Democrat, Georgia

“

I'm a front office supervisor. I have stopped eating lunch in the break room because my conservative views don't align with many of my co-workers and their liberal views.

— Female, Republican, Louisiana