

SHERWOOD LUMBER

Sherwood Lumber's commitment to employee appreciation extends beyond typical corporate recognition, earning the company consecutive rankings as one of the Best Places to Work in Long Island.

Led by CEO Andrew Goodman, the lumber and building materials distributor climbed from the No. 9 ranking of Best Places to Work on Long Island in 2023, to the No. 1 spot in 2024.

"As an organization we embody industry leadership, employee development, team collaboration and a culture of respect," Goodman said.

The company's employee-centric approach includes an Associate Appreciation Week, end-of-year awards and a coveted Disney trip for the Associate of the Year. Monthly games, prize contests and themed appreciation weeks help maintain a vibrant workplace culture.

Employee benefits stretch beyond standard packages. The company matches charitable donations, encourages participation in community fundraising and provides employee discounts on everyday services. Regular companywide in-person events strengthen team bonds.

"Our dedication to fostering industry advancements and community engagement exemplifies our standing as a true trailblazer," Goodman said.

Sherwood Lumber emphasizes three core aspects of employee satisfaction: a supportive work environment, competitive compensation and benefits and consistent associate recognition.

The company's comprehensive approach to employee development includes promoting team collaboration and maintaining a culture of respect while pushing for innovation in the lumber and building materials sector.

This focus on workplace culture has proven effective in retaining talent and fostering growth. The organization maintains its position as a prominent industry player while prioritizing internal development and employee satisfaction.

Through structured recognition programs and informal appreciation initiatives, Sherwood Lumber has created a workplace environment that balances professional growth with personal well-being. The company's sustained presence in the best workplace rankings demonstrates the success of its employee-focused strategy.

GRASSI

We're proud to be recognized and congratulate all of the 2024 honorees

The Best Employer Survey Answers All These Questions And More.

