New Hawaii Based Focused Initiative Launches to Connect Non-Profit Organizations with Essential Resources

Through taking a holistic approach in helping Hawaii thrive, the EHF aims to further excellent work that organizations are already doing across four key aspects – education, culture and arts, Hawaiian heritage, and environmental protection. The EHF will facilitate essential connections to provide critical infrastructure, funding, human resources, and empowered leadership that’s needed to ensure organizations flourish.

Louise K. Davies, Director, of Eia Hawaii Fund, said, “Throughout Hawaii there are plenty of amazing non-profits that are doing incredible work to create thriving communities that are in balance with the natural wonders found across the islands. Preserving what makes Hawaii such a wonderful destination for future generations is essential and that encompasses numerous different aspects, from teaching youngsters about the traditional rituals to taking steps to encourage native wildlife. We’re thrilled to be supporting organizations that are already taking steps to do just that and helping them to achieve even more over the coming months.”

The newly launched EHF has handpicked the initiatives and organizations that it will forge relationships with, announcing them over the coming months. Building on deep philosophy of trust that’s part of Hawaiian culture, EHF will aim to fill a vital gap in the between what organizations need and what the government is currently able to provide. Recognizing it’s not a lack of will or ability that currently holds organizations back but resources, the EHF will act as a bridge.
