

PRESS RELEASE

Millennium MusicMedia

“First there was the World Wide Web.....Now there’s Millennium MusicMedia”

New York, NY - November, 2016: Millennium MusicMedia has fired the first shot of a revolution that has been long coming, with the development of its Universal Distribution and Tracking System that re-defines the business rules of the music industry. This is more than just a new product. The system represents a shift in consciousness for an industry that has failed to meet the needs of artists or adapt to the rapid changes in music and technology.

The software does exactly as its name implies. After years of being financially exploited by labels, writers, producers and artist now have a way to distribute their products on a global scale while eliminating the many layers of middlemen, who feed off of their profits like vultures over an animal’s carcass in the wild.

Millennium MusicMedia’s mission is to change the antiquated methods and rules of the industry that has stifled artists creativity and provide a universal standard for the distribution, protection and tracking of digital intellectual property and associated royalties. Millennium is providing writers, artists, publishers and others with a technology that makes global distribution a reality with an emphasis on security, accountability and enforcement of copyright infringements.

Millennium’s technology creates a whole new economy by enabling artists, writers, publishers and others to directly control every aspect of their projects on a global scale. “Artists can now know exactly who, where, and when their product was sold in all territories of the world. With that knowledge readily available, they can see all of their money without having to traverse the globe to pin it down. The revolution is here.” Ronald T. Holt, CEO.
